Low, winds and lower, dip among the grass Sweep along your emerald flood, touch me pass, High, birds, and higher reach the infinite sky, Wishful hearts may well aspire—you can or fly!

Now about me falters in Sunlight through the shade, Higher' for I cannot rest Till I see the robin's next, And the four blue eggs within That the mother bird has laid!

Now is folded faster round me
All the tree's intenser green,
Leafy arches close about me
As I sweep between!
Fly the birds and I fly with them.
Farther would I dare to range.
Beating to a boundless rhythm.
Set to music wild and strange!

Low, winds, and lower, dip among the grass.
Sweep along your emerald floor, touch me as pass.
High, birds, and higher, reach the infinite sky,
Wishful hearts may well aspire—you can on fly!

any means; but then Lettice Mainwaring was one of the sort that makes the best of everything.

"It's a long journey over the hills, miss," said the wife of the landlord of the little one-story tavern that was perched on the crest of the highway, "and the snow's powerful deep."

"I think a winter landscape is the prettiest thing in the world," said Lettice, cheerily, as she wound her furs round and round her neck.

"And old Stokes' stage is awfully uncomfortable," added the landlady.

"I like stage riding," asserted Letty.

"You'll not get there till dark."

"Oh, that is sooner than I expected," Letty answered.

And Letty climbed up into the stage coach which stood creaking and groaning at the door, having just rumbled up from the village, a mile or so down the hill.

Om the village, a mile or so down the opposite corner—a tall, dark man, with a Spanish sort of complexion and clear, dark eyes, who wore an odd sort of an olivegreen cloak or mantle, heavily trimmed with sable fur.

He nodded briefly in return to Letty's smiling recognition.

Our little heroine would have talked polar bear, had a polar bear her traveling companion.

And, as the chaise rolled away, Letty felt herself flush deeply.

"I'm afraid lawe been talking too much," thought Letty; "but what is a body to do, shut up all day long in a stage coach with a conversable gentleman?"

And the rest of Miss Mainwaring was just a little tedious.

Letty searched in the straw at her feet for a dropped glove.

"Thanks—no," said Letty, coming up again with very red cheeks, and carls a little dishevelled. "Are you going all the way through?"

"As far as the stage goes—yes."

"Oh," said Miss Mainwaring, "so am I."

Letty soon forgot her temporary annoyance and chagrin in the white, skeleton-like wall of an old paper mill, long since disused and fallen to ruin.
"I wonder if it is baunted?" she said aloud.

His face brit hiered.
"Oh, yes. You are going there?"
"Yes. I am going to be governess to the little children," said Letty, making haste to enlighten him as to her true position, in order that he should fully comprehend that she was no elegant young lady coming to the Hall to make a visit, but a humble little working girl, who was obliged to toll steadfastly for the daily bread she ate.

And you must not cry, either", as the tears came into Letty's eyes. "There is nothing for you to cry for."

"Why didn't you tell me who you were?" she asked piteously.

"Because you never asked me."
Letty resolved within herself that she would leave Easterham Hall the very next day.

But she did not been the metals that she would leave the search as A day or two ago a motherly-looking woman of forty-five entered a Wood-ward avexue clothing store having a man's linen duster on her arm, and when approached by a salesman she "Some one in here sold this duster to concerning the preservative coating recently applied to Cleopatra's Needle, a London Times correspondent writes:

"In operating upon the granite, Mr. Browning first gave it a thorough cleansing, removing all the sooty and greasy matters from the surface, and then indurated it with his invisible preservative solution. The effect has been to give a freshness to the granite as if only just chiseled from the rock, retaining the original color, disclosing the several veins, the white spar shining in the sun's rays like crystals, and exhibiting the polished portions as they formerly existed. The solution enters well into the pores of the granite, and the best authorities consider that it will have the effect of thoroughly preserving the monolith.
